: How to Create Movie for YouTube and other social media? "A simple, yet brilliant approach to getting more likes on social media websites" Let's face it, social media advertising is about engagement. People are using social media for entertainment, to do some research, to get updates from their friends or even just as a great distraction from the daily grind. You can take the basic approach of trying to encourage people to like or share your Facebook page, or maybe post some images of you and your friends, or even try to get as many people to follow you as you can. But what if you could use social media to help you get more likes on Facebook, to help you get more followers on Twitter, and more views on YouTube? It's a simple, yet brilliant approach to getting more likes on social media websites. The no-brainer solution is to get fans to create "like" status updates on Facebook, which will then go and show up in their friends' newsfeeds, thus making them want to like your Facebook page. This is easy to do by putting some code in your Facebook page's HTML and setting a custom URL in your Facebook settings (which will allow you to customize your URLs and add your own custom Facebook sharing button). But creating status updates is easy. However, you must remember that these updates will appear in your friends' newsfeeds. So, the next question is how do you get them to like your Facebook page? Easy, all you need is a pixel or a Javascript. These little things called "pixels" (actually they are tiny, invisible web applications, more commonly known as "cookies") can help you to do this, which brings me to my next point. You can add the following pixel code to your Facebook page: &c=1&v=1&ref=t&fref=t&hb=1&h=1&hb_is_iframe=1" width="0" height="0" 82157476af
